WATERS ON RAMPAGE IN AMERICAN FORK CANYON

AMERICAN FORK June 6.—High water is on the rampage, carrying destruction with it, from the mines in American Fork canyon to the shores of Utah lake. The American Fork creek, which is dry practically the entire year, is new a raging river and has proved difficult to handle. Over 200 men have been engaged for the past twenty-four hours along its route doing all that fley were able to do to protect houses, barnyards, farming land, big bridges which cross the stream, and, more important than all, the weir in the mouth of the American Fork canyon, which is now in a very dangerous condition. This is a big structure, which divides the water and diverts it from the main channel for irrigation purposes, for which it is ordinarly used in its entirety. It is from the source that mactically the entire north end of this county depends for its irrigating waters, and should this go it would be at the expense of the farmers crops, as it would be an impossible task to replace it in time to prevent the farms from suffering from the effects of drouth. The American Fork canyon wagon road is now in an impassable condition, all the bridges having been taken out, and the road in many places carried entirely away. A score of ore teams have been eaught in the upper part of the eau-yon where they have no chance of getting out for, at the very least, six weeks. Mining operations of all kinds are at a standstill and the regular shipments of ore from here will be held up.

The footbridges on Main and First South streets, and the wagon bridge on First North street, have been carried away, and the rallway bridge at the latter place is in danger.
